But, as you re climbing the Veta Pass, You think of the golden strand; For the very angels cry We, too, pass, On the scenes of the Rio Grande. Then, sing no more of Killarney Lakes, While the summit holds Loch Katrine, And mountain crags--why, Toltec takes The scalps from the whole Alpine. If you d like to go up and steal a sly peep Where saints in glory-- can t --stand, It s on top-- when you get there--of Hurricane Peak, On the Denver and Rio Grande. For every known ill the climate s a cure, From blues to joys you can fly; And in Denver, they say, the air s so pure Politicians and papers don t lie; And the ravishing sounds in the Cave of the Wind You would think are a heavenly band: The point nearest heaven most of us...
