Table of Contents Introduction Children and Peer Pressure Mind What Your Kids Do When Idle How Parents Influence Children s Behavior Having A Role Model and Mentor Traits of DisciplinedChildren Conclusion Author Bio Publisher Introduction Disciplinecan be defined as the attribute or trait of being well behaved. A disciplined person is one whose behavior is generally accepted or approved by the society. In order to be categorized as a disciplined person, there are several things that you have to always do regardless of whether you re alone or in public. There are also several things that you must never do if you re interested in becoming a disciplined person. Discipline entails how you relate with other people, what you say to them and how you say it. It is quite easy to gauge somebody s manners just a few minutes after meeting him/her for the first time. Even if they try to hide it, they will eventually slip and reveal their true self. This means that regardless of how much you try to hide it, other people will eventually know if you re disciplined or undisciplined. This principle applies to children as much as it applies to adults. Even if you coach your child how to behave when you have visitors, the child will eventually slip and reveal his true character. Rather than wait till your child matures, why not nurture discipline in him while he is still young? Level of discipline will determine how successful your child will be in future. So as to be successful academically or in their careers, children have to be always disciplined. Discipline is also one of the core attributes insuccessful sportsmen and...
